A FEMALE FILIPINO GENERAL She Has Now Given Up the Revolu tionary Cause.

(From the Manila Freedom.) Gen. Agela of Bungungbung, Leguna, is the only woman general in the insurgent army. Since the American occupation she has given up the revolutionary cause, and is now general of an army of industrials, whom she commands as rigidly as the gallant Filipao suldiers that she led go gallant Filipno stildlers that she led 20 successfully against the Spaniards. Bungungbung is a small pueblo across the lake from Santa Cruz. It consists of about 100 nipa houses, and not more than 200 Filipinos live there and in all the barries nearby. The surrounding country is wild and mountainous. There is little cultivation and the entire population live by inviting down the extensive forces a and cultivation and the entire population live by cutting down the extensive forces and, manufacturing firewood for the Manild market. It was in the midst of these rugh, rugged weens that Gen. Ageta was born and reared. From her early childhood she showed great strength of mind and capacity for business. Her father was a sort of chief of that neck of the woods, and when her father pass d in his checks Agein continued to act as of the woods, and when her father press d in his checks Agefa continued to act as presidente and control the cutput of wood that went yearly from the district.

When the Filipinos rebelled in 1836, Aguinaldo, appreciating the prestige of this wonderful woman, gave her a commission as general in the revolutionary army, and she soon organized all the different barrios into a perfect military organization of second chorages, another settle balomen, when rius into a perfect military organization of wood choppers, apparently balomen, when there was a chance ta do up n detachment of Spanish soldiers. In this mannar she extended her jurisdiction beyond the confines of Bungungbung and has held the prestigs she gained in those days ever since. Today she controls the labor of 2,000 natives who live far into the mountains, but who have a wonderful respect for General Ageja. In the field she showed herself the mistress of the art of war, and did greatedamage to the Spanish troops stationed at different points in Laguna province. Since American occupation she claims to have devoted herself to industrial persuits, and her 2,000 followers are kept husy cutting wood and delivering it to the different contractors who supply the city:

an interview with this enterprising and interesting Ellipino lady at her home in Bungunghung. She welcomed him with the warmth characteristic of the Filipino the warmth characteristic of the Fitiplino character. The little woman did not look big enough to sway the brigade of bolomen, but there was about her an air of command that struck her visitor fore-fibly. All her servants seemed to work like clockwork, and her power to sway the hig bolomen was well illustrated during the visit. She talked freely of the strucking and showed a disposition for situation and showed a disposition for peace, and throughout the conversation peace, and tarongment the conversation she aliways seemed to have an eye open for business and was open for a contract for wood. She explained the method em-ployed in dealing with the natives. She handles all the wood and collects the money from the contractors. The natives are used their share, and the general is widely known as most honest in her dealings with both contractors and natives, and possibly it has something to do with the wonderful influence she wields over her brigade of bolomen, for they all carry a great big bolo strapped to them. The interview was broken into by the arrival of one of the limitations. rival of one of the lieutenants, who told her that he had them, and the "them he referred to afterward proved to be party of natives who had stolen a large quantity of wood from a caseo that she
